Basics of Real-Time Task Scheduling

Let us get started. So, we had looked at the basics of modeling time can be referred to different types of timing constants and modeling, and we had seen some little bit of scheduling terminologies. Now, let us get started from that point. So, the basics of real time task scheduling, and as we proceed, we will look at sophisticated tasks scheduler starting from very simple tasks scheduler to more and more sophisticated schedulers. It is not that the simple ones are not used; the simple ones are the one that is used maximum, because many small devices exist.

(Refer Slide Time: 01:06)

Introduction

- Real-time tasks are generated due to certain event occurrences:
 - Either internal or external events.
- Example:
 - A task may get generated due to a temperature sensor sensing high-level.
- When a task gets generated:
 - It is said to be released or arrived⁴.

But the complex one is also used. So, you need to look at those various types of task schedulers. So, these are some of the terminologies, we had looked at like a task is released or arrived when the task is generated due to an event.
